

WEBSITE SPEAKER PAGE CHECKLIST

The more specific and compelling your speaker page, the more likely you'll be invited to speak.

- Photos of you in action – choose photos that show your facial expressions and energy so they feel confident that you'll bring liveliness to your presentation. You want them to be professional but not stiff.
- A video clip of you speaking. Choose the very best clips from recent speaking events (or one event is fine, too) and create a 1 – 3-minute video. If you can show a range of experience moments from your speaking, that's ideal – funny moments with audience laughing, passionate delivery moments and thought-provoking ones are a good mix. If you don't have any video of you speaking, put this on your list to get as soon as possible. It really helps the organizers decide that you are a great fit if they can see you in action. Consider creating a speaking scenario with some colleagues or friends and setting up a camera to record. As long as the audio and picture are quite good (and you are delivering your best speaking in the video!), this is much better than not having a video. An even better option is to hire a local videographer – a local college may even have students studying film or a class filming department you can tap – and have them film your next free talk.
- A list of topics on which you can speak. Create a list of speech titles that would excite the audiences for whom you most want to speak. It's great to lead with your Rooftop Message™ Speech (the message you take a stand for in your work) in this list and mark it as “my most popular” topic (of course, only if this is true – even if it's just in your small group or client interactions). If you don't have that validation yet, you can also say, “my leading topic.” Note: they will (and should) choose a topic that their audience will truly love. This is the kind of alignment you want as well because that is how you can best delight your audience as a speaker.
- A short bio that highlights your speaking and expert experience. This is not the place to share everything you've ever done, but do mention any and all speaking and facilitation in your background. If you've worked with respected brands or people in your ideal client's industry and you have permission to mention them, that can be great “social proof.” Volunteer experience included!

WEBSITE SPEAKER PAGE CHECKLIST

- A list of publications or other high-profile appearances, even if you weren't a "speaker" at those events. These connections and opportunities show the meeting organizer that you have been contributing in relevant industries in a leadership way. This adds credibility to your expertise.
- Testimonials from previous speaking, if you have any. If you have spoken in any environment – a previous job, as a volunteer, community events – then ask for written testimonials from those events. Your old boss, a colleague or a fellow participant can all give valuable feedback if you don't have testimonials from professional speaking events yet.
- A warm written invitation paragraph for them to contact you to discuss speaking which shows genuine excitement at the opportunity. Do not use business speak here – be conversational. They want to know you'll be engaging as a speaker and right now, especially if you don't have a video clip and they've never met you, all they've got is your writing to go on.
- Contact info, including email and phone number.
